

Resolution Calling to Increase Teen Civic and Political Engagement by Allowing Half-Day Student Advocacy Events

Patrons: Matthew Savage, Adrian Klaitis, Anthony Miroff

---

Whereas, Under new school board policy, middle and high school students of Fairfax County Public Schools (FCPS) are permitted to take a partial day excused absence to engage in political or civic events;

Whereas, The new FCPS policy has been largely successful despite unfounded fears that serve to prevent the ability of students to express themselves;

Whereas, The implementation of the new FCPS policy did not impact the rates of chronic absenteeism, nor is there any evidence of abuse, as assessed by the Virginia Department of Education School Accreditation Ratings;

Whereas, Of the six FCPS middle and high schools that did not “exceed state standard” of preventing chronic absenteeism in the 2018-19 school year, only one had their score downgraded for the 2019-20 school year, and one had their score upgraded to “exceed state standard;”

Whereas, As a general practice, the United States Congress and the Virginia General Assembly are in session only during the regular business hours of the week, and therefore those days of the week are the best for student activists to influence public policy;

Whereas, There is a great amount of desire among students to get involved in political advocacy, but it can be difficult to do so when all of the decision-making occurs during the regular school week;

Whereas, Partly as a result of the aforementioned obstructed civic engagement, the youth vote today consistently falls behind other generations;

Whereas, Policies such as these encourage political involvement and participation of teens which eventually translates to a more politically conscious electorate;

Whereas, Increased political involvement shall help remedy the low voting rate of young people;

Teen Caucus of the Virginia Young Democrats

Whereas, The voices of young people should, as a principle, be heard and amplified to further the best interests of this nation;

Now, therefore, be it
